

I would be very disappointed if XM radio would be forced to submit to any further restrictions in the variety of information they are allowed to broadcast. The free market should be the deciding factor in the success of XM radio.

The present radio communications are filled with so much noise pollution that there seems to be enough individuals who are willing to pay for this service, that XM radio can be financially sound. The NAB obviously feels threatened that they will be unable to compete on a level playing field.